Department Goals and Objectives

The Office of the City Auditor is focused on enhancing user experience, making it easier for taxpayers and users to work with the city, improving transparency, deepening financial analytics, expanding access to critical information, and refining how the city communicates financials. Each budgeted initiative underscores the commitment to delivering essential services that the community relies on, from maintaining top-tier financial reporting to securing information and investing in advanced technology.

Strategic Priorities for 2025

The City Auditor's 2025 budget includes continued investments in technology focusing on optimization and expansion of ongoing modernization efforts. Three major technology systems are fully implemented, and an online transparency portal has been launched to provide greater access to data. Significant areas of focus in 2025 include:

Revenue System: The city's revenue system, which processes over $1.2 billion annually from various taxes and manages over 435,000 taxpayer accounts, is essential to the city's financial performance. The 2025 budget reflects ongoing funding for the administration of this system, including hosting and taxpayer-focused initiatives. The Income Tax Division has significantly increased credit card payments through the Merchant Services Program, with expectations to double these transactions in 2025, offering faster, more secure payments. A partnership with the IRS' Modernized e-File (MeF) service has expanded to include seven national software vendors, enhancing tax services for both businesses and individuals. Additionally, the division is leveraging new IRS data sets to close the tax gap through discovery and audit programs. In 2025, digital wallets and an upgraded inbound phone service will be introduced to further improve customer support and payment adoption.

Dayforce Payroll and Time & Attendance: The city's expansion of the Dayforce platform is driven by growing departmental demand for its time and attendance features, with many offices on a waiting list to modernize their processes. While core payroll features are stable, continued technology investments are needed to introduce new capabilities like position management, performance evaluation, and benefits management. To support these efforts, the office is adding a data scientist position to leverage the vast data generated by various systems, providing advanced analyses for the city's financial leadership team and supporting the data and reporting needs of other city agencies.

D365: The city's financial management system, Microsoft D365, continues to optimize features for end users. Further expansions and improvements are anticipated as the system evolves, such as introducing additional business applications for city departments and employing new applications to streamline citywide processes.

Transparency Portal: The Transparency Portal, launched in 2023, gives internal and external users access to frequently requested public records and data. Throughout 2024, the office has continued to add features and dashboards to enhance transparency and data accessibility. Plans are underway to further enhance the portal in 2025 by integrating Microsoft Copilot to upgrade the Al-powered digital assistant, Claire, and expand user functionality.

Staff Development and Retention: The operational success of the City Auditor relies on retaining highly skilled staff with specialized knowledge and certifications. To support this, the office prioritizes training and professional development, ensuring the team stays proficient in modern systems. Looking to 2025 and beyond, the City Auditor's Office requested continued funding for professional memberships, training programs, and continuing education to foster employee growth and maintain top talent, which is essential for the continued success and innovation of the office.

2025 BUDGET NOTES

CITY AUDITOR

The 2025 budget funds the continuation of the division's core services and existing programs. The staffing changes reflect a strategic shift: the City Auditor is not rehiring for jobs that have become obsolete but are instead hiring for roles that align with the current advanced technology needs of the office. The budget also covers annual external audit services and the preparation of the ACFR and PAFR.

INCOME TAX

The 2025 budget for the Income Tax Division also supports evolving staffing needs and funds the operation of the city's revenue management system. Key initiatives include growing electronic payment adoption, expanding IRS e-File services with additional tax software vendors, and using new IRS data to address tax discrepancies. In 2025, the division will also introduce digital wallets and improve phone support to better serve taxpayers.
